

Level: bachelor
Course title: Seminar Environment and Health
Status: elective
ECTS: 5
Requirements: none
Learning objectives Obtaining knowledge of the way in which health of human population is influenced by the environment. The objective is to get this knowledge through preparation of literature review on the topic selected.
Learning outcomes <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Student applies already existing knowledge from the field of Environmental protection and available literature to prepare the literature review on topic related to the influence of environment on human health. • Student plans his/her own work, reports on plans and presents the work in the group of at least two other students. • Student is able to write an abstract and define the key words.
Syllabus Theoretical instruction To learn literature search and writing of literature review (definition of structure, reference list). Topic choice is related to influence of environment on health (water, air, soil or waste). Thematic choice is given by the lecturer and they are related to different pollutants of organic or inorganic origin, radioactivity, regulations etc. Team work training, creating of meeting reports related to literature repositories and division of tasks among the group. Preparation of presentation and presentation in front of the group. Practical instruction -consultations related to topic selected. Internet search and library search. Abstract writing and definition of key words. Writing of seminar. Creation of presentation and its defence.
Weekly teaching load				Other: -
Lectures: 1	Exercises: 1	Other forms of teaching: 3	Student research: -	